You could work as a voluntor at an animal rescue centre. If you are persistant, after a few months you might get a permanous job. Then after a few years you might be able to work as a vet.

Josh's idea is ridiculent! I don't want to subvalue your enthusiasm, but lots of people want to work with animals and it's actually very difficult. To become a vet you have to study veterinary science at university and take lots of exams! It isn't easy to get a place but if you are successible it does lead to a great career.

You don't have to be a vet. There are lots of differant jobs you can do with animals. My pre-flatmate works at a zoo and he really enjoys it. Or what about working for one of those overnational organisations that protects endangered wild animals?
